Monash University Department of Rural Health, in association with Gippsland Centre against Sexual Assault, are seeking men to participate in a research study examining the barriers for men seeking help following sexual assault or abuse, and how services can support men more effectively. Even if you have not personally experienced sexual assault, we would like to hear your views.

The research will involve participants responding to interview questions, either in person in Morwell, Victoria, or by telephone or email. Your responses will be kept private and confidential.

Participation is open to people living in Australia who identify as male, aged over 18.
